POLICE SERVICE IS INCREASED BY COUNCIL ACTION

Following a thorough study and report by the Police Commission, on Monday evening the City Council appointed three police clerks, one of whom will be on duty day or night to receive any calls or complaints.

This addition to the police department it was believed necessary because there are only two policemen on duty at one time, and should the two be called away, as happens quite often, the people of Daly City have no one during that time to whom they can report any trouble such as breakage in water mains, which could cause serious damage if not given immediate attention; breaking of fire hydrants, with a loss of thousands of gallons of water and possibly serious damage, or many other things of a serious nature that might happen and to which immediate attention would be of inestimable value.

The plan includes an exchange phone with trunk lines, such as is used in most all other cities of like size.

In order to guarantee twenty-four hour phone service with an attendant always on hand, the board decided to appoint three extra men, who will also take care of the clerical work in the police department and one of whom will be license collector.

As day attendant and license collector the Council appointed Edward J. Ford, former sealer of weights and measures of San Mateo county and a member of the volunteer fire department for over twenty-five years.

For the night service William J. Bolger, also a member of the fire department, and Arthur J. Dalton, who has served on the City Council for several years, were appointed.

Having received the appointment, Councilman Dalton resigned from the Council, and Henry Sunderman, who had previously served on the Council for twelve years, was appointed to fill the vacancy for the unexpired term.

W. A. Banfield, also a member of the fire department and one of the active members of the first aid deparment of Company No. 1, was appointed to the duties of city janitor and poundmaster.

Mr. Banfield will reside at 2133 Junipero Serra boulevard, where the pound is located, so there will be someone on duty at the pound at all times.

R. F. Byrnes, managing director of the San Mateo County Renovize Committee was present at the board meeting, and was called on to present his mission, in which he told of the Renovize campaign that is about to start on August 1. He also stated that there is a certain cost for printing and other costs for which money had to be raised and that it was necessary that cities in the county be called upon to assist. He stated that quite a number of business men and cities in the county had already contributed, and expressed his desire that the Daly City Council would do likewise. The board voted that the assistance be granted, the sum of $90 being appropriated.

County Planning Commission adviser Hugh Pomeroy sent a letter to the board, stating that his mission to Washington in the interest of municipal projects proved to be of considerable value.

A request from the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, with offices on Wellington avenue, asking for a "No Parking" section in front of their office, was granted.

SPEEDER CRASHES INTO PARKED CAR

Two San Francisco men narrowly escaped death at an early hour Monday morning when a speeding hit-run driver crashed into their stalled automobile on the Skyline boulevard, near Colma. The stalled car was hurled over a forty foot embaukment, taking Ray Ellitt, who was working on the car, with it as it went on a wild plunge.

Elliott was taken to the Villa Sanitarium at Colma, where he was treated for head injuries. William Steinich, 3073 Thirtieth avenue, driver of the stalled car, was also injured. Passing motorists reported the license number of the hit-run car to Constable S. A. Landini.

Woman Faces Death Charge

Mrs. Gladys Sisevich, San Mateo matron whose auto ran down and killed a young woman and her infant daughter near Palo Alto, according to police, was arraigned last Monday in Redwood City on charges af manslaughter and driving while intoxicated, and trial set for August 11.

LOCAL MAN VICTIM OF POISONED FOOD

Harry Melicker, of Irvington street, a member of the Colma-Vista Grande F. O. E. band, is in the Community hospital in a critical condition, the result of eating poisoned food in a picnic lunch. Little hope is held by the doctors for the stricken man's recovery.

Mrs. Melicker and son Harvey, 9, and Mrs. Leona Meyer, 42, are also in the hospital seriously ill. The family had a picnic at Memorial Park last Sunday. They were taken ill after eating a picnic lunch. County authorities are having the food analyzed.

AMERICAN LEGION NOTES OF INTEREST

Daly City Post and Unit No. 410, American Legion, will hold a joint whist tonight, July 28, at 8:30 o'clock, at the Legion Hall. The public is invited.

The Eighth District caucus will be held in the San Francisco War Memorial tonight. This is the night the District Commander is to be elected. As many members as can are urged to be present.

Don't forget the social tomorrow night, July 29. "Doc" and his haywire orchestra will be there with lots of entertainment.

The executive board will meet on Wednesday, August 2, at Legion Hall.

The County Council will meet at San Bruno, Friday, August 4.

Important Notice to Presumptive Cases

The special presidential boards which have been appointed to review the folders of World war veterans whose disabilities have been connected with service by presumption will probably be required to base their decisions and findings upon the evidence as shown in the veterans' folders.

It is, therefore, of the greatest importance to those veterans to obtain immediately any lay or medical evidence available which would indicate that their disabilities resulted from the military or naval service. This is especially important in the cases of those whose presumptive service connection was based on first showing of disability more than one or two years after discharge, says Louis A. Johnson, National Commander.

Century of Progress in Medicine

The story of the progress in medicine is a panorama of epoch making contributions of brilliant minds, a story of labors, researches and achievements of great scholars. The modern scientific and preventive medicine has evolved through millions of years, from the prehistoric times up to our era. But during the last century the true scientific medicine has made more advances than in thousands of centuries before. Let us now take an aeroplane flight over the progress of medicine in the last century and recall a few of the great achievements.

Vaccination against smallpox was discovered by a master mind, Edward Jenner, a practitioner in Gloucestershire, who had observed that milkmaids who had been infected by cowpox from the udder of the cow were insusceptible to smallpox. He put his observation to the test of experiment, and inoculated the arm of a little boy with a small amount of vaccine virus taken from the hand of a young woman who had been accidentally infected by a cow. Months later the boy was exposed to smallpox and proved to be immune to it. Jenner repeated his experiments and proved conclusively that the vaccination was full protection against smallpox. From that time on smallpox has been under control.

Before 1843 the child bed was often the death bed, because antiseptic and aseptic methods were unknown and the contagious character of puerepal fever had not been discovered, A physician attending several women in childbirth would innocently carry the germs from one suffering with the fever to others and cause thereby an epidemic of slaughter of mothers. But in 1843 a keen and scientific observer discovered and proved to others in the profession the contagiousness of the child bed fever. Shortly after, the science of facteriology came into existence, as well as antiseptics. The combined knowledge put an end to the "black death" of child birth, as it was called then. Now in all well equipped hospitals and in hands of well trained physicians puerperal fever is as rare as smallpox.

The end of the fifth decade of the nineteenth century is marked by a discovery of supreme importance. No more precious boon has been granted to suffering humanity than that granted by the discovery of anasthesia. Imagine the horrors before its discovery. Pain and shock caused such a high mortality that the surgeons were afraid to operate for even most urgent conditions. Without operation the patient would die of the disease that he was suffering from, with the operation he often died of shock, pain and bleeding. Ether anasthetic was discovered in 1846 by William T. G. Morton, a dentist and medical student at the time. Morton, after experimenting with ether in his dental practice and on animals, gave a public demonstration in Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, where he successfully administered ether to a patient during the operation. In the Hall of Science there are miniatures of scenes of how amputations and setting of fractured bones were done in pre-anasthetic days, and of the first operation with the anasthetic in Boston.

Although medicine had made tremendous advances from early dark and mystic ages, up to about seventy years ago very little was known about the cause of diseases. In 1857 the brilliant Loius Pasteur, whose name is familiar to us all, published his first studies on "Fermentation of Alcohol," in which he concluded that fermentation of sugar into alcohol was caused by something alive. He went to work and proved that diseases also were caused by minute living organisms, and not by the oxygen or any gaseous properties of air, as was accepted then. Other investigators, stirred by Pasteur's work, took to the task, and by aid of the microscope, which had come in use, conclusively proved that the cause of known scourges—the plagues, the fevers, the pestilences—were small living bodies—microorganisms. This was a severe blow to the then accepted idea of spontaneous generation of disease. In the Hall of Science there are pictures of these great men at work, and charts, models and studies showing conditions previous to their time and accomplishments since. Soon after Pasteur's great work, with new technique and experimental methods, the discovery of the specific germs of many of the more important acute infections followed each other rapidly—typhoid fever, diphtheria, cholera, tetanus, plague, pneumonia, and others.

The next great advance was the discovery of antiseptic. A young surgeon at Glasgow had studied the remarkable effect produced by carbolic acid upon the sewage of a town, not only preventing all odor from the lands irrigated with the refuse material, but, as it was stated, destroying the entozoa which usually infest cattle fed upon such pastures. He had often seen the wounds collect pus and decompose. In pre-antiseptic days, both spontaneous and operative wounds were almost invariably associated with pus formation and they frequently became putrid, as it was then called, or infected, as we would call it. The general system became involved and the patient died of blood poisoning. So common was this that many surgeons feared to operate and mortality in all surgical cases was very high. This young surgeon, Lord Joseph Lister, applied some carbolic acid mixture antiseptic to some compound fracture cases and found the results more than gratifying. From his work modern surgery took its rise. Since then more experiments and researches have perfected the technique of operation, so that at the present we have aseptic surgery, and infection of wounds is most uncommon.

Immunization—protection against a disease without actually suffering from it—is another accomplishment of our era. Now we can protect individuals against smallpox, diphtheria, scarlet fever, typhoid fever, cholera, whooping cough, and a number of other diseases. A great deal of the work along this line has been accomplished by the American investigators.

One of the greatest contributions of the last century to the scientific medicine has been the discovery of internal secretion of organs. There is perhaps no more fascinating story in the history of science than that of the discovery of these so-called ductless glands. The study of the interaction of these internal secretions, their influence upon development, upon mental processes, upon characteristics, and upon disorders of metabolism, is likely to prove in the future the key of many of our present day domestic and social difficult problems.

Within the last decade or so some eventful researches have discovered cures for some otherwise hopeless diseases—insulin, secretion of a ductless gland, in diabetes; thyroxin for thyroid disorders; liver extract, for

VAST CAPITAL IS DRAWN BY MINES

By J. W. MARCHBANK
Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work.

Able editorials in the Vancouver Sun are enlightening to miners and of vivid interest to the general reader. The comments are right in line with the most modern tendencies in the mining industry. Good times have arrived for the seekers of gold and our northern contemporary never loses an opportunity in emphasizing the way things are going.

Investors are aware of the tremendous development in mining this year in British Columbia and capital is headed in that direction more than ever as the months pass. The Sun recently said:

"It takes money to develop mines, which in turn repay many times the original investment. And it takes faith to provide the money. It is up to the British Columbia goverment to develope and nourish that faith among investors."

It is also pertinently pointed out that interest in mining in British Columbia is at the highest point in years, with gold selling at fifty per cent more than its par value and the hills literally full of engineers making reports for investors.

Reports are being received that Omineca may prove to be another rich district. An expert says the area is likely to equal the Bridge River district in production as soon as its potentialities are realized. L. S. McGill, manager of Omineca branch of the British Columbia Chamber of Mines, has put himself on record as of the opinion that from Usk to Smithers are many deposits of undoubted worth that merely await capital for developement.

Important results are being obtained at the Region Mines gold group in the bridge river district. A gold bearing reef reported to be from 25 to 40 feet in width has been shown and the crew is sampling the reef through open cuts on the surface. The group is considered one of the good Bridge River prospects.

Atlin district may hold the center of interest in the next gold rush, according to accounts of parties with holdings in the area. The district is rich in placer gold and operators are doing well. No ourcroppings of gold quartz, such as were discovered in the Cariboo, have been found up to this time.

Cariboo Gold Quartz states that the mill has resumed operations, with the crew working to capacity. Development work on the mine has been of the most satisfactory character.

Cariboo Gold Fields has organized one of the largest gold mining property holdings in the Northwest. The company owns or controls 138 claims in the choicest section of the Bridge River and Cariboo areas.

Pioneer Gold Mines of British Columbia produced $1,175,250 worth of gold, including premium, in the first six months of this year. Production for the month of June totalled $193,800.

NOTED SPEAKER IN GRACE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Grace Presbyterian church will be honored Sunday morning at 11 o'clock by the presence in the pulpit of Dr. F. W. Beidler, of Howard Presbyterian church. Professor Beidler is an educationalist of San Francisco and also an elder in Howard church, one of the oldest churches in the city. Rev. J. R. Stevenson will speak in Howard church in the morning, but will appear in his own pulpit in the evening at 7:45, when a popular Gospel service will be held, with the old gospel hymns as a special feature. Miss Lucille Hill has been engaged during the school vacation to conduct a Vacation School for the benefit of the children, and the children of the community are always welcome at Miss Hill's school, which opens every morning except Saturday at 10 o'clock.

RACING BOARD APPOINTED

California now has a State Racing Commission, whose appointment was confirmed by the Senate last Wednesday. The new board is composed of William P. Roth, president of the Matson Navigation Company and the owner of breeding stables near Woodside; Carlton Burke, nationally known polo player and a resident of Los Angeles; and John A. Naughton, stockyards official, of Los Angeles.

VETERANS FORM SECOND COUNCIL

Old Glory Post No. 2044, Veterans of Foreign Wars, is one of the leaders in the movement to surrender the charter of the Five County Inter-Council, for the purpose of forming two Councils, which no doubt all will agree will enable the Veterans to get closer contact with actual conditions in their respective communities, and in that way will be able to perform greater good in their civic work.

At the meeting of the Council held in Watsonville, July 15, every Post with the exception of one was fully represented, and all were unanimous in their opinions that the contemplated move was the best that has been undertaken in several months. By an unanimous vote, the charter was surrendered, and immediately action was taken by the delegates to form two Councils, and get them in action that no time be lost, and in order that contemplated plans may begin to function with the least amount of disorder.

As a consequence, the counties of San Benito, Monterey and Santa Cruz elected temporary officers, with instructions to proceed with the work of organization at once. The counties of San Mateo and Santa Clara elected their temporary officers, and instructed them to start organization within the two counties. The temporary officers elected were: Commander J. W. Allen, Daly City; Senior Vice-Commander, Devenpeck, San Jose; Junior Vice-Commander, Nelson, Palo Alto; Quartermaster, Schlegle, San Bruno; Officer of the Day, Daly, San Jose; Trustees, Brown, South San Francisco, Augustus, San Mateo, Sevier, Redwood City, and last Adjutant appointed temporarily, Fred. Linser, Daly City. We know with these officers elected that no time will be lost in the formation of the San Mateo-Santa Clara County Council.

The regular monthly dance held under the auspices of the Post, and of which Fred. A. Collins is chairman, had their usual good attendance, and all reported a most jovial time, The proceeds of this dance was turned over to the degree team for their uniforms, and we anticipate in about three or four weeks to see our team out in full regalia.

The next regular meeting of the Post is scheduled for July 28, and we hope that at that time many important movements now in process of formation will be far enough along to discuss on the floor and bring our influence into line to assist in the recovery movement now on foot.

FRED R. LINSER, Adjutant.

NATIVE DAUGHTER OFFICERS ARE FORMALLY INSTALLED

The newly elected officers of El Carmelo Parlor No. 181, N. D. G. W., were duly installed at a public installation held on Wednesday evening, July 19, by Mrs. Mona Thiesen, Deputy Grand President from Yosemite Parlor, assisted by Mrs. Helen McMahon and other members of Yosemite Parlor.

After the installation, Mrs. Julia Sampson Romer, the newly installed president, greeted the many visitors who were present to extend good wishes to the new officers. She pledged herself to the advancement of the order and asked for the cooperation of all the members.

The gavel was then turned over to Mrs. Alice Oldham, chairman of the evening and a short program was presented. Mrs. Alice Anderson, Junior Past President of the Parlor, was presented with a beautiful emblematic ring for her untiring efforts in the welfare of the Parlor.

Dainty gifts were also presented to Supervising District Deputy Rena Mathias, Deputy Grand President Mona Thiesen, President Julia Sampson Romer and Past President Ethel Anderson, and to the assistants of the Deputy Grand President, all of whom thanked the Parlor and extended congratulations and good wishes to the newly installed officers.

After the program, dancing was enjoyed by those present and refreshments were served in the banquet hall. This part of the evening's entertainment was under the capable leadership of Mrs. Louise Clemens Eliasen, chairman of the Good of the Order committee.

The newly installed officers are as follows: Past President, Ethel Anderson; President, Julia Sampson Romer; First Vice-President, Louise Eliasen; Second Vice-President, Elsie Behringer; Third Vice-President, Leona Walker; Recording Secretary, Alice Oldham; Financial Secretary, Christine Hume; Treasurer, Florence Hopman; Marshal, Pauline Gregoire; Inside Sentinel, Eleanor Boyle; Outside Sentinel, Vera Bertucci; Trustees, Mary May, Fredereka Volkman, Anne Biggio; Organist, Dolly Galway.

RACING PROGRAM ENDS TOMORROW

The popular week end Tanforan race meeting will come to a gala close tomorrow (Saturday) with Winooka, Australian wonder horse, making his American debut in a special match event with the fleet Frisky Matron or the equally speedy Hueu.

Whether Frisky Matron, holder of the Tanforan record for six furlongs, or Hueu, Hawaiian bred 3-year-old, will oppose the invader from the Antipodes, will depend upon a final trial to be held for the two horses today.

After watching both speed burners breeze through trials during the week, Charles A. Hartwell, owner of the pair, is inclined to favor Hueu. The latter is thought to be more advanced in training than Frisky Matron.

It is expected that a crowd of 20,000 or more will gather at Tanforan to see the famous Australian in action tomorrow. Although Winooka made a public appearance between races last Saturday and engaged in a trial three furlong sprint last week, tomorrow's match race will be his first competition on an American track.

Thus lovers of horses and the sport of kings will be out in force to see what manner of showing will be made by the steed that is being mentioned as an opponent for the equally famous Equipoise.

Messrs. MacDonald and Matthews, owners of Winooka, returned this week from Chicago, where they saw Equipoise run last Saturday. After watching the American they are willing to wager practically anything that Winooka can beat Equipoise at seven furlongs, equally weighted.

Jockey Edgar Britt is expected to ride Winooka and Jockey Howard Grayson will be aboard the Hartwell horse.

In addition to the match race an attractive program has been selected for the closing day. Because of the special event, all passes will be suspended, it has been announced.

CENTURY OF PROGRESS EXPOSITION AT CHICAGO

Sanitation, prevention and control of human scourges take their place among the great modern scientific revolutions. The scientific researches of the last two or three decades have pointed the way to exact knowledge of causes, cures, prevention and control of diseases. Our Federal government and public health organizations, by scientific and efficient methods, have almost completely abolished the so much dreaded twenty to thirty years ago, typhus fever, typhoid fever, cholera, plague, malaria, and many other communicable and preventable diseases. It is not hard to predict that in the near future we will have remedy and protection against cancer, immunization against tuberculosis, cure for many obscure diseases, and through more knowledge of ductless glands a better understanding of human motives and psychology, therefore better handling of problem individuals.

What I have tried to tell here in words can be seen with eyes in the Hall of Science through pictures, miniatures and charts. The most spectacular and popular medical exhibit is the Transparent Man. He is a full size man, six feet tall, made out of cellon, a transparent material, superimposed upon a skeleton, with a complete set of internal organs. He rises from a pedestal three and a half feet high. Groups of spectators circle slowly about him to see the brain, the thorax, the lungs and other organs illuminated in succession by means of concealed electric bulbs, as though one was suddenly endowed with X-ray eyes to view the inside of the human body. This transparent man is only one of two in the world. He was made in Dresden, Germany, and required eighteen months to make, at a cost of $10,000.

ROOSEVELT DISCLOSES PLAN FOR RECOVERY

Anxious millions listened to a radio address by President Roosevelt last Monday evening. Delivering the most momentous address since his inauguration, the President held out a golden promise of lasting prosperity, but bluntly told the American people he could deliver the goods only with their help.

His speech came at a time when the giant wheels of his national recovery machine were just beginning to turn. It was a supreme effort to accelerate their motion.

The foundation stones for prosperity have been hewn, the President declared. Courses for the future have been charted. There must come now, to bring success, and in return for rounded governmental leadership, an unstinting support in the national drive to raise farm prices and halt the creeping paralysis of unemployment.

Clearly, the executive explained, all that is possible to start the country moving toward better times has been done. He reviewed the work to that end accomplished to date since March 4, and found it good. From now on, said the President, it is up to the American people.

The President made it bluntly clear that he does not consider his recovery program a "cure-all", and does not believe in panaceas. He took pains to point out that it was based on the oldest of principles—that on which this government was founded—that all working together can accomplish what one cannot do.

Confidence that agriculture and industry would fall in line was clearly expressed. At the same time, the President did not minimize the dangers which might accrue should any group shirk its job. He pictured the past four years as "economic hell," and warned that failure to co-operate in the effort to restore commodity prices, provide a living wage for the unemployed, reduce unemployment, and at the same time provide a fair investment for capital, would mean a return to such conditions.

In its essence, however, the address of the President was one of intense optimism.

RENOVIZE CAMPAIGN RECEIVING SUPPORT

All parts of San Mateo county are rallying strongly behind the "Renovize San Mateo County" banner, campaign headquarters report.

Dave Ratto, as chairman for South San Francisco, and Albert A. Rochex, as chairman for San Mateo, were important appointments made early this week by former Governor C. C. Young, chairman of the county executive committee.

Civic workers have been volunteering their services for the drive early in August in every community, and many unsolicited advance pledges of renovizing work have already come into the campaign offices.

The house-to-house canvass is scheduled to start about August 8. Over 500 volunteer workers will, during a period of ten days be engaged in personally contacting property owners and securing their pledges to renovize at the present low costs.

Following the example of the San Mateo City Council, which last week voted financial support to the county-wide campaign, the Daly City Council last Monday evening made an appropriation of $90 for the campaign.

County Scout Executive Edward A. Barrer placed the services of the San Mateo County Boy Scouts at the disposal of the campaign, and the Boy Scouts are today distributing the Renovize window display cards to merchants in all parts of the county.

Aid For Redwood City Port

Preparation by County Engineer James S. James of detailed plans and specifications of the Redwood City port for submission to Washington as part of the necessary procedure to secure federal aid for the project under the National Industrial Recovery Act, has been authorized by the San Mateo county board of supervisors.

Wardell to be Recovery Chief

Justus S. Wardell, original Roosevelt supporter in California, and former Democratic candidate for governor, has been named regional director of public works administration for the four western states of California, Nevada, Utah and Arizona. Headquarters will be in San Francisco.

ORGANIZE COUNTY COUNCIL OF VETERANS

The United War Veterans Council of San Mateo county was formally organized on July 21, at a meeting held in the American Legion hall at South San Francisco. The following officers were elected: A. J. Dempsey, president, lives in Redwood City and is active with the United Spanish War Veterans; Dr. J. N. Blood, vice-president, lives in Redwood City and is well known in American Legion circles; John N. Vogt, Jr., secretary, active in county council and lives in San Bruno; William H. Augustus, treasurer, lives in San Mateo and is active in the Veterans of Foreign Wars organization; Mel Schlamm, sergeant-at-arms, of Lomita Park, and a member of the Disabled War Veterans; Eugene C. Signarowitz, publicity chairman, lives in San Mateo and is the newily appointed correspondent of the Forty and Eight Society. The five to serve on the service commission are: A. J. Dempsey, chairman; T. Louis Chess, of the American Legion; Don Reid, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars; M. R. Peterson, of Disabled American War Veterans, and Fred Brown, of United Spanish War Veterans. Following is a list of names of well known persons to serve on the relief commission: Captain Edward McAuley, chairman, of Unemployment Relief Committee; Edward Stack, representative of Board of Supervisors; Dr. J. N. Blood, of American Legion; A. Van Valin, of United Spanish War Veterans; William H. Augustus, of Veterans of Foreign Wars; Harry Sinclair, of Disabled American Veterans of World War; F. M. McGraw, representing unorganized veterans, and Jack South, representing the Press. The constitution and by-laws were adopted. The next meeting of the United War Veterans Council of San Mateo county will be held in the San Mateo clubhouse of the American Legion, Post No. 82, which is located on Bellevue avenue, near San Mateo drive, on Friday night, August 18. A fine group was present and the South San Francisco Post of the American Legion were hosts.

FATALITY OF DISEASES

If you were told that you must have one of the well recognized diseases and take your chances on recovery, which would you choose? According to two eminent physicians who have studied the percentage of fatalities from various maladies, your best bet would be to choose having measles.

For they have found that only four-tenths of one per cent of cases of measles prove fatal. On the other hand, the most deadly of acute diseases is lockjaw, which is also one of the most horrible.

Yet lockjaw is not necessarily fatal, as many believe. In fact, it is nowadays fatal in only 41 per cent of cases, considerably less than one-half.

Among the more common diseases, pneumonia is the most deadly. Still, even in this most serious malady the mortality rate is only seventeen per cent.

These figures, we assume, are based upon the asumption that no other complications are present. As a matter of practical experience, a very great number of deaths are due not merely to the acute disease which may be the preponderant factor, but to a combination of causes.

KEEP ON GOING

A remarkable example of the spirit of aggressiveness of American business in meeting the exigencies of depression is found in the progress made by the share-the-work movement.

Its list of sponsors reads like a blue book of industry. A single participant has put 50,000 more people to work in his plants and offices by sharing the work. Another has given work and a livelihood to 35,000. Hundreds of other great industries have, in the same maner, lifted the burden of want from thousands of the unemployed.

But-share-the-work must have the aid of the smallest business if it is to succeed as it should. We hear much of industries that employ a thousand or ten thousand or more workers—but these industries are few and far between. The great bulk of unemployment stems from concerns employing a dozen, or a hundred, or several hundred people. These businesses, too, must share-the-work. They must stretch one job into two—if distress due to unemployment is to be banished.

At the moment there are between ten and twelve million unemployed in this country. Millions of them can be given the self-respect that comes with a job by further effort in the work-sharing direction. A recent report indicates that a total of about 1,100,000 people have been given work in this manner—let's hope that record is dwarfed in the months to come.

Don't be in too much of a hurry. Remember the fate of the early worm.

ERRORS CAUSE OF DEFEAT OF EAGLES

The Parkside Theatre team evened things up with the local Eagles' baseball team last Sunday, by defeating them 8 to 4, on the High School grounds. A few weeks back the Eagles came out on top 3 to 0.

The Eagles started off like they would repeat by scoring three runs in the first and third innings on some well placed hits by Johnston and Conforti. With the score 3 to 1 in favor of the Eagles in the fourth inning, the local's infield cracked and had a wild inning in which the Parkside boys scored seven runs on three hits, two of them infield, three errors and two walks. Outside of this one bad inning the boys played great ball.

Petrocchi, local high school star, pitching his first game for the Eagles, twirled a sensational game, striking out sixteen batters, allowing but five hits, two of them of the fluky variety.

Marino, pitcher for the Parkside boys, was touched up for eleven hits. A. Anderson,, in center field for Parkside boys, featured with sensational catches.

Petrocchi and Johnston's hitting featured for the locals.

A game will be played next Sunday on High School grounds, 2 P. M. The following is the lineup:

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.

William Southern, Jr., publisher of the Independence (Mo.) Examiner, says:

"The sins committed in the name of advertising are legion. Hundreds of men and women hang on the fringes of legitimate advertising plans, adopt the name of advertising and pull off schemes which are fraudulent and worthless and make a living. These are parasites and hurt legitimate advertising.

"There is only one redeeming feature in these schemes. That is the ones who bite and who take space are usually men who do not take legitimate advertising. Newspaper men occassionaly get our special editions in order to reach this class of business men.

"Other parasites in the advertising business are the publishers of 'throw-away' papers, so called, shopping guides and shopping news sheets, all simple hand bills.

"Had it ever occurred to you, Mr. Merchant, that every dollar you spend in throwaways, in handbills and schemes, is a knock at your home paper? Had it ever occurred to you that you are weakening the power for service of your home newspaper when you spend money on these schemes?

"I would like to ask the business men of this country what part handbills had in keeping the boat steady during the bank moratorium? The newspapers did the job. Themselves hit hardest, they printed the real facts; they prevented riots and mob action; they kept the minds of the people steady and made it possible for the Federal government to carry out its plans by the bank moratorium."

Endeavoring to Save Boy

State-wide aid is being sought to save a San Mateo high school graduate from the gallows next week. The condemned boy is Jack Green, who graduated from the San Mateo high school in June, 1918, and who, with his sister, Ruth, were exemplary students. Jack is facing the gallows after conviction for complicity in the murder of Hugh A. Crowley, Los Angeles police lieutenant, during a theatre holdup there on January 11, 1932. He is condemned to die on August 4.

Coast Mussels Now Poisonous

State health authorities issued a new warning this week that mussels taken from the coastal areas are poisonous. Persons taking week end trips to the coast beaches are warned against eating them. Laboratory examinations of the shellfish have revealed them to be highly toxic, it is reported. Taking or selling of shellfish from Monterey to the Klamath river is forbidden.

A new container for cigarettes automatically delivers one piece at a time and lights it as it is projected from the interior.

ADVOCATE RECALL OF BOARD MEMBERS

Following the action of the San Mateo county board of supervisors last Monday in creating the office of county counsel and in naming W. H. Morrissey, Redwood City attorney, to the new job at a salary of $200 a month, threats of recall and injunction have been made.

Members of the board of supervisors are reported to have declared that the appointment of Morrissey was only temporary during the period of turmoil over charter interpretation and that he would not be employed when present problems were solved.

The appointment, which came toward the close of a day filled with verbal battles, was interpreted by the objectors as a practical displacement of the district attorney from his position as advisor to all the county offices on civil problems.

Under the new set-up the district attorney would be confined to prosecution of criminal cases, while Morrissey would assume the duties of advisor to county and township officials.

Threat of recall came from William H. Eddy, of Burlingame, chairman of the citizens' charter enforcement committee, recently set up at a meeting of charter supporters in Burlingame. Eddy announced that he had issued a call for a mass meeting to be held this Friday night for the purpose of discussing the recall movement.

THE RENOVIZE CAMPAIGN

With San Carlos, Redwood City, Burlingame and San Bruno leading the way, the county-wide Renovize Campaign organization was rapidly being completed this week.

Former Governor C. C. Young, executive committee chairman, has named the following local general chairmen: Jack Lynch, Burlingame; Judge R. A. Rapsey, San Bruno; A. S. Esneault, San Carlos and Henry Witte, Redwood City.

San Carlos, of the sixteen communities which will carry out their own local renovize pledge drive, is the first to report a complete organization. A. S. Esneault, in his capacity as vice-president of the San Carlos Chamber of Commerce, working with H. B. Cook, Jr., president, has been busy for weeks organizing his territory. When Executive Chairman Young began naming his general chairmen this week, Esneault had his organization ready to start with the opening gun.

An emblem was adopted for use in all publicity in the million dollar campaign. The emblem contains a plasterer's pointing trowel, paint brush, and hammer. The words "Renovize San Mateo County" circle the outside of the emblem.

Over five hundred volunteer workers will be used in the drive to secure pledges to renovize from property owners. Civic leaders in all parts of the county are volunteering, but more are still needed, says Chairman Young.

Goldenrod, which has been more or less a floral outcast as far as hay fever sufferers are concerned, has been restored to good standing by the United States Department of Public Health, Ragweed, found in every State, is responsible for the disease, it is said.

The San Quentin Bulletin turned to statistics long enough to report one prisoner had kept track of all the food he had eaten during fifteen years as an inmate. His record shows 2,157 hamburger balls, 32,850 slices of bread, 4,975 cups of tea, 9,950 cups of coffee and 270,000 beans, the latter item averaging fifty beans a day.

R. C. Ward of Sanger is heading the Fourteenth American Legion District, succeeding Claude L. Kamp of Coalinga, retiring president, following an annual session of district Legionnaires at Sanger. C. Two appointments to the Veterans' Welfare Board were made recently by Governor Rolph, O. A. Saniman of Stockton was named to succeed J. P. Brennan, resigned, for the term ending January 1, 1936, and Leslie F. Olsen of Los Angeles will replace Archer Bowden, term expired. Olsen's term will end January 1, 1937. Brennan will continue as director of the State Department of Military and Veterans' Affairs.

Trout, 22,000 of them, made their way from fishermen to lake, instead of lake to fishermen, when Lindsay sportsmen went on a fish-planting expedition to Maggie Lakes. The consignment, the third planted by the Lindsay Fish and Game Protective Association this season, was of eastern brook trout. Making the trip were W. H. English, E. B. Gould, Harry Pursell, Clyde Buckmaster, Rex Pursell and Paul English.

One hundred and thirty-five orphans of World War victims are to be aided in their education during the next year under plans being shaped by Miss Margaret Anderson, in charge of this work in the state veterans welfare board. The state has made a $25,000 appropriation to continue this service. Last year there were 120 boys and girls between 16 and 21 years of age who were helped on the way to independence through the state's assistance.

The conservation camp men at the mouth of Santa Ana Canyon are starting on the flood-control work. The Water Conservation Association of Riverside, San Bernardino and Orange counties will direct the work of 220 men. In the past the association has spent about $225,000 in the conservation work there and during the past year eight miles of lateral ditches about fifteen feet wide and three feet deep and two miles of main channel to spread the water were built.

Following a two day conference at Eureka, representatives of the Humboldt County Redwood industry adopted an agreement establishing a general wage increase in line with President Roosevelt's suggestions and the National Industrial Recovery Act. The agreement will go into effect immediately. The wage increase will be of a general nature, affecting nearly 2,000 men now employed, while a program is being initiated to advance the national lumber code adoption.

Stanford University, former President Hoover's home, comes in for $1,300 for a governmental project under the Roosevelt business revival plan of public works expenditures, according to reports from Washington, D. C. The United States Department of Agriculture has maintained an experiment station at Stanford University for some years, and under the list of items issued to be carried on by the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Agriculture Department is $1300 for a laboratory building at Stanford.

By the action of the Assembly Governor Rolph' veto was sustained on the proposed law which would have placed the marking of State highways under the Public Works Department at the expense of the taxpayers. The proposal sought to take from the California State Automobile Association and the Automobile Club of Southern California the arrangements now in effect by which those organizations have carried out an orderly marking of the roads of California, both State and county.

The first contingent of men arrived recently at Hamilton Field, the Army's new bombing base in Marin county. Flying in eight big Army bombers, they came during the morning from March Field, Riverside. The planes returned to the latter base. The men are mostly mechanical experts, and will put in the next three months completing installation of machinery and other equipment. They will be under command of Capt. Don L. Hutchins. The next contingent will arrive in October.

Thirteen hundred and fifty carloads of peas, the largest crop movement in the history of Alameda county, were shipped to Eastern markets this season from the Central California Pea Growers' Association and the Farm Products Company. Manager Henry Jorgensen of the association reported he had shipped 347 carloads, as compared with 226 last year. The Farm Products Company handled more than 1,000 carloads.

Almond growers of Merced county will organize in order to be able to act as a unit in cooperation with plans of the national agricultural adjustment administration, it was decided at a meeting at Merced, directed by Elmer B. Wood of Atwater. The meeting was called by M. J. David, prominent valley almond grower. The growers will organize under plans to be announced by H. R. Tolley, head of the Giannini Foundation of the University of California, who recently was appointed administrator for special crops throughout the country by President Roosevelt.

Prices of California wines, of which 23,000,000 gallons are stored in bonded warehouses, have nearly doubled in the past few weeks. E. E. Sheehan, director of the Grape Growers League of California, so declared at San Francisco. Sheehan said the prospect of repeal of the eighteenth amendment and eastern capital seeking investments in vineyards and wineries were responsible. "Claret that we shipped in the Spring for 25 cents a gallon," he said, "is now hard to get at 45 cents. Sweet wines that sold for 50 cents now bring an average of 90 cents.

Is the new crop of oranges now on the tree the lightest since 1917 or is there more fruit than some of the experts think? Horticultural experts insist that Redlands does not have more than a 50 per cent crop or in the neighborhood of 2700 cars to be shipped next year. Some expert growers, however, do not agree with them and while they admit the crop will be light they insist it will be close to 65 per cent. "I'm inclined to think the navel crop will not be more than 45 per cent and the Valencia crop perhaps only 40 per cent of a normal crop of say 5360 cars," he said.

Formation of a county-wide voluntary curtailment organization of pear growers was launched at a meeting attended by more than 200 growers and fruit shipping officials at Placerville recently. The meeting was called after a conference of local fruit packing houses, and was addressed by James A. Irving, president of the Placerville Fruit Growers, and officials of Gerrad Company, Sgobel & Day, the Earl Fruit Company, and other houses operating in the county. The object of the organization, it was pointed out, is to bring about a voluntary agreement among growers to curtail shipments of pears next Fall, when, as and such action is needed to prevent congestion of the eastern markets and to build up the prices which may be received.

In order to keep "Kern county money in Kern county" and better meet the needs of students, a plan is being pushed to make the Randsburg section a part of the Tehachapi High School district. Lancaster promised to keep up the branch here if the grammar school trustees would continue providing the location free of rent, and also run a bus for those who preferred to attend the high school in Lancaster. But the rooms in the local grammar school are needed, and economy is urgent. Under the new plan a bus would take seventy-five pupils to Tehachapi through Mojave, from which place the distances to Lancaster and Tehachapi are about the same. The latter high school is already crowded, and it is proposed to build more rooms with the aid of a Federal government loan, or with a bond issue.

California Toll Bridge Authority was recently given immediate possession of East Bay property owned by the Key System, Ltd., and the city of Oakland and other interests by a court order issued by Superior Judge Wood. The State body was directed to deposit a check for $6214.15 with the County Clerk of Alameda county in payment therefor, pending the settlement of two friendly suits to quiet title. The suits were brought by the toll bridge authority in charges of the construction of the San Francisco-Oakland bay bridge, to clear all titles to the land used by the bridge construction work. One action is brought against the city of Oakland, the Key System and the Sacramento Northern Railway, and covers a fairway parallel to the Key pier from the fill to the pier itself. The other, filed against the Railway Equipment and Realty Company, Ltd., the Key Terminal Railway, Ltd., the Wells Fargo Bank and Union Trust Company and the city of Oakland, covers a fairway from the end of the fill east to Yerba Buena avenue on the Oakland shore. The suits are routine establishments of title by legal procedure.

Changes voted in the city charter of Oakland, Alameda and Berkeley at the June 27 election were ratified by the Assembly of the Legislature. Resolutions for the ratifications were introduced by Charles W. Fisher of Oakland and William F. Knowland of Alameda and Albert H. Morgan Jr., of Albany.

Hamilton A. Bauer, former San Francisco attorney and once candidate for Lieutenant-Governor of California, has been committed to the State Hospital at Agnew, on the complaint of his sister, Miss Hambla Bauer.

Edinburgh Sights

One of Edinburgh's Many Monuments.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

EDINBURGH, focal point of many tours through Scotland, is singularly, if austerely, beautiful.

The city is a honeycomb of massive stone buildings rising to heights that made it the Manhattan of the Middle ages, some of the walls so thick that long afterward elevators could be installed without protruding into the rooms.

By all precedents and guide books, the Edinburgh visitor should head straight for Castle Hill. But to some the first thriller they ever read, "Doctor Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," still is the most vivid tale of Edinburgh. So they hunt out Brodie's Close, dank and dark to this day, though not so evil-smelling as when its dual denizen, Deacon Brodie, was a Doctor Jekyll by day and a Mr. Hyde by night.

Pause before entering the close—you would call it an alley—and the mind's eye converges into a swift news reel of events along the history-encrusted Royal Mile, into which it opens.

Grand Dame Eleanor, countess of Stair, leaps from yonder window (still in full view) to escape a tantrum of her violent, if blue-blooded, husband. Down a "wynd" whispers one hag to another gossip from opposite seventh stories, the ancient walls leaning like two Pisas. Dainty Miss Eglintoune, later Lady Wallace, skips across the way to fill a kettle from the community well. Hoydenish duchess of Gordon rides a sow she had captured under a neighbor's "forestairs," while her more dignified sister belabors the animal with a stick.

Only the backbone street was wide enough for carriages in those days; ladies and gallants were borne in sedan chairs by stout Highlanders into the side arteries for teas and calls. Burghers' wives, in silks or Scotland's fine wool, shopped for jewels in basement cubbyholes, or bought velvet and laces at tiny booths under roofs of the balconies reached by the peculiar forestairs of nearly every tenement. They were jostled by countrywomen in green and crimson homespun, and by sailors from ships that brought over cattle and tallow from the Low Countries.

The Lawnmarket Sector.

Brodie's Close opens now, as then, into the Lawnmarket sector of the Mile, where Scotland's parliament once ordained "all cotton claith, white and grey; all lynning claith is to be sold there and in no uther place." Open stalls and canvas-topped booths, displaying bolts of cotton and webs of linen, were besieged as are bargain counters today.

About you remain the "lands" or tenements of the days when a city wall pressed to an altitude and compactness like the lower East side in New York. Of course, your memory can disregard time and bring events of centuries into instant focus.

Toddling aristocrats play with racing ragamuffins. They scurry at the approach of a party of Knights of France in glittering armor, their pennants flying, on their way to a tournament to compete for the coveted king's prize, a golden lance.

One day Mary, queen of Scots, spirited in spite of her ill-omened reception at Leith, rides by on a white palfrey, a tiny pearl crown nestling on her high-dressed hair. Twelve courtiers, in black and crimson, carry a canopy for her. At Netherbow she halts to receive the keys of the city; she extends her little hand for the provost to kiss. The sun suddenly emerges and glistens in her white satin gown.

Quick-witted, she utters an impulsive greeting, "The sun comes out with me, Master Provost." The city is hers; from mouth to mouth passes the cry, "God bless her bonnie face."

No Place for Night Strolls.

Ten o'clock; the tavern and clubs disgorge their crowds. Everybody rushes for home. Up and down the street rings out the world's most effective curfew—the cry, "Gardy-loo, gardy-loo" (gardez l'eau). Down pour swill and garbage from hundreds of tenement windows. It is a luckless citizen who has not reached shelter.

Little wonder the fussy Boswell, trying to put his town's best foot forward for captious Johnson, complained, "I could not prevent his being assailed by the evening effluvia of Edinburgh." The residents of fashionable St. James court were thought very aloof and squeamish when they engaged a private scavenger to remove their refuse. Today all Edinburgh is equipped with a modern sewage-disposal system, and even its narrowest streets are kept immaculate.

From Brodie's Close steals a stealthy, sinister figure, all wrapped round in a black coat. Beneath its folds he clutches a pistol and a ring of keys. Furtively he enters this shop and that. Earlier in the evening—any evening for several years—a most respectable town councilor, who also was a deacon of the Guild of Wryghts and Masons, attired in immaculate tail coat and breeches, might have been seen leaning against a door post where some merchant had trustfully hung his keys while he was at his tavern. Concealed in the palm of his hand was a clay mold. From an impression it was easy to make a key. Robberies became so frequent that the town council called a meeting. Deacon Brodie gravely counseled about ways of stopping the depredations. He thoughtfully advised tradesmen about the kinds of bolts to put on their doors. So zealous was he that he even went about while merchants were at dinner to make sure their doors were locked.

One night a particularly heinous robbery took place and two culprits were caught. A third escaped. Strangely, the highly respectable Deacon Brodie also disappeared. Stories went around. Certain cronies whispered how the good deacon gambled with them for high stakes. Two of his mistresses complained that the kind gentleman had gone away and made no provision for them.

Deacon Brodie was apprehended in Amsterdam, lodged in the grim Tolbooth, and executed October 1, 1788. His skeleton keys now hang in the Museum of Antiquities. His "strange case" was immortalized by Stevenson. The fact that he could operate on such a cramped stage, scarcely a twenty-minute walk in any direction from his happy family fireside, emphasizes the tremendous crowding of the Old Town.

Architecture of Old Times.

The Royal Mile, from Castle Hill, through Lawnmarket, High street, and Canongate, is clean today, but its tenements are just as crowded, and they justify the modern implication of the term, for wealth and fashion have migrated to the broad streets and stately squares of the New Town.

There remain the molded doorways, armorial bearings, crests and texts, the peak gables, the intricately carved finials, the mammoth locks and door handles, and the exterior forestairs, leading up one flight to the interior "turnpike" stairs to the floors above.

One architectural feature is puzzling. In some houses there appears a slit much narrower than other windows. Inspection discloses that these apertures light tiny closets opening off the dining rooms. They were retreats for the head of the house, where he might perform his devotions.

From Lawnmarket it is only a short walk to Castle Rock, whence Edinburgh was hewn, which anchored the Old Town, which uplifts the castle whose history spans half the world.

Standing guard over the opposite end of Princes street from Castle Rock in Calton Hill, affording a view that reaches out to Fife and the Ochils. Calton is dotted with an amazing collection of monumental and architectural curiosities which, somehow, seem to achieve harmony.

Beside the incomplete Parthenon of Craigleith columns, there is a Nelson monument that shelters a museum; homely Bobbie Burns is awarded a copy of the choragic temple of Lysicrates; a high school reproduces the Temple of Theseus at Athens; there also are an observatory, a burying ground, the tombs of Hume and of Stevenson's parents, and a jail!

Gazing in another direction from Calton Hill, the eye catches lonely Holyrood, aloof from the city, crouching under the mighty shadows of Salisbury Crags.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

Washington.—Cotton farmers of the United States, or a sufficient number of them in sixteen states, have just given a demonstration of what can be done by unified action. We have just seen them sign contracts voluntarily under which they have agreed with their government to destroy certain portions of their growing cotton crop as a concerted effort to force prices higher that their industry may live.

Effect of United Action

As a result of this action, more than 9,000,000 acres of growing cotton will be plowed under. That means approximately 3,500,000 bales from the potential crop will never be allowed to attain maturity. It will never be on the market; it will never be used for clothing or other fabrication; it is out of the economic life. Whether such a course is good or whether it is contrary to the laws to which all humans must respond, is another question. The fact is that we who live have seen a government and a people take a step that history must record as epochal.

The farmers are going to be paid for that portion of the crop which they destroy. I have the exclusive information that the average amount to be paid them will be close to $150. A great many will receive more because they are larger producers and some will get less, but there are thousands of them who will receive around that sum in cash. All will receive the additional benefit of a higher price for that portion of the crop which grows on to harvest.

I am told privately, and I think it is an interesting fact, that the bulk of the contracts offered to the secretary of agriculture under the cotton plan carried estimates by the farmers that are proving to be conservative.

The government, through the Department of Agriculture, is arranging the scale of payments so that it will figure out from $7 to $20 per acre. If a farmer's land is producing this year an estimated 100 pounds of cotton and not more than 124 pounds, he will receive $7 for each acre plowed under. From that basis of production, the payments range upward to $20 an acre where the production is calculated at 275 pounds to the acre or more.

In addition to the plan of payment I have been describing, there is an option plan under which the farmer is given an option on cotton which the government heretofore has acquired in the various farm relief programs. The purpose of the present plan, of course, is to force the price higher. The cotton which the government holds, therefore, can and will be sold sometime for more money than it was worth when the government bought it. An option is given the farmer by which he can become the titular owner of this government cotton in an amount equal to the amount he agrees to destroy out of this year's crop. He can get this profit instead of the cash payment available otherwise.

The option plan is based upon payments ranging from $6 to $12 per crop acre, and the government makes no payment on destroyed crops where the estimate showed a potential production of less than 100 pounds to the acre. That is true regarding payments under the cash plan. Which brings to the fore the real reason there is payment at all. The government considers that the farmer is entitled to a return on his land and the payments, whether in cash or optional holding of old cotton, and gets what amounts to a rental to let it lie idle insofar as the cotton crop is concerned. He can use it for potatoes or something else, just so it is not cotton.

But from whence is the money coming to make these payments and how is the government going to stand such a tremendous drain in order to make good on its promises to the cotton farmer and to the wheat farmer who likewise is soon to sign agreements not to plant so much acreage this fall or next spring?

Where Money Comes From

The processing tax is the answer. The government will collect from the miller 4.2 cents in a tax on every pound of cotton that goes into mills for manufacture into the thousands of uses for which cotton is available. It will collect 30 cents a bushel on every bushel of wheat that enters a mill from which to obtain funds for paying the wheat farmers ground rental if they withhold a certain portion of their acreage from planting in the next crop year.

It seems intricate to most of us, but the Department of Agriculture experts say it is simple, this method of calculating what the farmer is to receive, whether cotton or wheat. They explained it to me thus: a cotton farmer has been growing an average of 150 pounds of cotton to the acre during the last five years and he estimates that his prospective crop this year will be just about the same. His payment is figured on that basis. The wheat farmer has been producing a stated amount each year and he contemplates the same acreage next year. His crop over a period of years can be and is averaged up and he gets paid accordingly. The total reduction of acreage in whatever crop is figured out here on reports from farm agents in the various counties and the total cost to the government is arrived at. The total average sales over many years is a matter of record. That is, the records show how much the millers of wheat have handled and how much has been exported and the cotton producers' records also are available. The processing tax then becomes a matter of a percentage. It is simplified to the point where the calculation must be made on the difference in the total average value of the crops from 1924 to 1926 and the current prices.

M. L. Wilson, the man who is managing the wheat program for the Department of Agriculture is just as optimistic about the wheat plan for forcing prices higher as Secretary Wallace and George N. Peek, farm adjustment administrator, are about the cotton plan which now has been effectuated. Mr. Wilson told me after a recent tour of three weeks through the 800-odd wheat counties of the nation that 90 to 95 per cent of the wheat farmers are going with the government on the plan. That means signed contracts just as the cotton farmers signed contracts agreeing to stand together in unified action that reasonable profits may be realized from farming operations.

There is going to be a shorter crop of wheat this year than is usual.

Short Wheat Crop

The Department of Agriculture estimates it will be around 496,000,000 bushels, whereas, it usually runs around 650,000,000 to 700,000,000. According to Mr. Wilson, the wheat farmers recognize that this year's short crop and higher prices will be followed by larger acreage in the plantings of winter wheat this fall and the spring wheat next spring. On the basis of acreage now growing, fall and spring wheat together, the next year's crop easily could go as high as 800,000,000 bushels. Just figure what that would mean on the basis of wheat consumption of around 650,000,000 a year. The carry over would break the price down to the level where it would be on the same basis as other stock feed and it would be disastrous. So Mr. Wilson says the wheat farmers are coming through in good shape as fast as they can be told what the plan means to them.

There are two other phases of the crop program that must be remembered, according to the authorities. One of them is the necessity for patience, particularly as regards the working out of the wheat programs. It will be slower than that affecting cotton. The other matter is less general but more pointed: the matter of attempts at self-policing the industry involved. I mean to call attention to the age-old practice of "taking the law into our own hands." That is not going to be countenanced by the government in any way, shape or form, for a law violator is a law violator, says the Department of Justice, and his punishment will not be made easier simply because he thinks he is enforcing a farm law and he happens to be a farmer.

In this matter of patience, I believe I state the view of the Washington observers as a whole that the various farm plans, as well as the plans affecting industry otherwise, should have a chance to show their worth. It is patent that nothing will help unless the programs designed to extend such aid are given time to mature. Unless they mature, the results are worth nothing to anybody. Hence, the belief of most of us that the nation must be patient.

As regards the self-policing problem. The Department of Agriculture the other day received information that a self-appointed crew of individuals was going about certain sections of North Carolina telling some of the farmers that either they would sign up contracts to reduce their cotton acreage or "we will pull it up by the roots." The threat to pull up the crop was accompanied by another kind of a threat. Agriculture Department folks do not want that kind of help in putting over the program. They want it to be voluntary co-operation, a sincere and serious effort to accomplish something by united action.

Co-operation Is Sought

On the other hand I am told, the agents in the various counties are accessible to nearly every farmer, and the department is willing to know of any unfair practices. That is part of the idea of co-operation. If a farmer signs a contract and fails to live up to his agreement, obviously he is hurting his own community and to that extent damaging the chances of success for the whole program.

But the point of distinction is that, if there are unfair acts on the part of individuals or groups, the government can and will correct them. It is not up to the self-appointed police, say the authorities in the Department of Justice.

RELIEF MOBILIZATION

While it is hoped that the unemployment situation may be less acute next winter, relief workers know that there will be a tremendous demand for food, clothing and shelter among the poor for many months to come.

Plans for continuing relief work will be laid at a rally of civic and welfare leaders, to be held in Washington in September. It is expected to conduct an intensive mobilization effort between October 29 and November 19, when the public will be called upon to give liberally for the support of local community chests, but no national fund will be raised.

Newton D. Baker, former Secretary of War and head of relief mobilization last year, again has been called to service as chairman of the 1933 mobilization, the object of which is thus stated: "Its sole purpose is to co-ordinate social service organizations and to present to the public the necessity of the human services which must be supported at this critical time."

As heretofore, women will play an important part in this mobilization, and women's committees will be formed in every community supporting welfare services.

Through the unselfish labors of many thousands of volunteer social workers, both men and women, sufficient funds have been raised in the past to reduce actual suffering to a minimum during the depression. This work must go on if the distress which still faces millions of our people is to be avoided.

AMERICANS ALL

An interesting little study in names is presented by the list of nine New York public school boys who were awarded Pulitzer four year scholarships at Columbia University, they being chosen from a field of ninety in the metropolis. Their names, on the order of the grades made in the competitive examination are as follows: Herman Kremer, Helmut Schulz, Thomas Jonaitis, Andrew Chiappe, Jerome O'Neill, Fred Tonetti, Hippocrates Apostle, John Morrisroe, and Milton Black. It will appear that German, Greek and Italian names predominate, and in fact only two of the boys were born in the United States. Among their fathers are a cook, a waiter, a construction laborer, a milkman, and a janitor.

But in spite of foreign names and foreign birth, these boys are now Americans all, with an opportunity to rise to whatever heights their ability and energy can carry them.

TODAY WE LIVE

TWO BIRTHDAYS

Two men of widely different types, each of whom has been prominent in the world's news for a long time, will reach important milestones in their life journey this month. Benito Mussolini will be 50 years old on July 29, and Henry Ford will be 70 on July 30. Both rose from humble beginnings.

In early life Mussolini worked as a common laborer, but managed to obtain a far education. He fought as a corporal in the World war until he was wounded in February, 1917. In 1919 he founded the Fascisti to suppress Bolshevism, and by 1922 it had 4,000,000 members. It demanded that Mussolini head the government and he was made premier by the king on October 30, 1922, since which time he has been Italy's dictator. His rule has been stern, but on the whole beneficial to the country.

Henry Ford had only a common school education, and began as a machinist's helper, later becoming chief engineer of one of Edison's companies. He was a pioneer in the automobile field and employed more than 100,000 persons at the height of production before the depression, at which time he was reputed to be worth a billion dollars or more.

There is a world of inspiration in a study of these two men, who by their own efforts have risen from obscurity to commanding places in their respective spheres of action.

CONFEDERATE CABINET

While the Confederate government under President Jefferson Davis was in existence only a little more than four years, only one cabinet officer, Stephen R. Mallory, secretary of the navy, served throughout the whole period. During the same time there were three secretaries of state, Toombs, Hunter and Benjamin; three secretaries of the treasury, Memminger, Trenholm and Reagin; six secretaries of war, Walker, Benjamin, Randolph, Smith, Seddon and Breckenridge; two postmasters-general, Ellet and Reagan, and four attorneys-general, Benjamin, Bragg, Watts and Davis.

Judah P. Benjamin, of Louisiana, went into the cabinet in 1861 as attorney-general, was secretary of war for a short time in 1862, and was made secretary of state later in the same year, serving as such to the end. John H. Reagan, of Texas, served as postmaster-general from 1861 until 1865, when he became the Confederacy's last secretary of the treasury.

President Davis, who had been secretary of war of the United States from 1853 to 1857, appears to have had difficulties with his own secretaries of war, whom, as noted above, he had six.

AN ENCOURAGING SIGN

Most encouraging is a report just issued by Dr. S. W. Wynne, health commissioner of New York City, concerning the decrease of automobile and industrial accidents in the city in recent months.

Automobile deaths numbered 100 in January, but only 70 in May, despite the fact that more cars were on the road and more children were playing in the streets. Industrial and other accidents dropped even more sharply, although more persons were employed in industry than in former months.

The records show 209 industrial accidents in April of this year, as compared with 272 in April, 1932, while in May of this year there were only 208, as against 296 for May, 1932.

This reduction in the number of accidental deaths and injuries, as well as deaths from alcoholism, Dr. Wynne declares in his report, is largely due to the fact that the legalization of beer has reduced the consumption of whisky and thereby promoted the cause of real temperance. He says:

"May, 1933, showed fewest deaths from accidents on our recent records. The conclusion is that the people of New York have been drinking less of strong liquors, and that the legalization of beer has saved approximately a life a day since April 7."

Anyway, it is encouraging to observe a reduction in the frightful death and accident toll which long has shown us to be the most careless people in the world.

THE PIE COUNTER

There has been murmuring for some time on the part of Democratic Senators, Congressmen and office seekers about the slowness of President Roosevelt in replacing Republic office-holders with Democrats.

But the President evidently believes that getting his recovery program under way is of more importance than giving his time to distributing political pie. And there will not be as much pie, it seems, as his campaign supporters expect.

Now, on top of this delay, the President has stirred up a hornets' nest by suggesting that all postmasters should be placed under Civil Service rules, instead of being appointed upon recommendation of Senators and Congressmen. Presidential Postmasters have for some years gone through the formality of a Civil Service examination before appointment, but everbody knows that this has been a farce, as almost invariably a member of the party in power has been appointed.

Of course, there is nothing gained by displacing a capable official for political reasons, so far as the public is concerned. But, politics being politics, it is unlikely that any marked change in the old system will be made for a good while to come.

OUR AMAZING HELEN

For the sixth time, Mrs. Helen Wills Moody won the womens' tennis singles at Wimbledon, England, a few days ago, playing the finals against Miss Dorothy Round, a little English girl, who gave the world's champion one of the hardest battles of her career. Since 1926, the California star has dominated the womens' tennis world, and she has been the American champion almost continuously since 1923.

Born in Centerville, California, in 1906, Helen Wills became the women's national tennis champion shortly before her seventeenth birthday. She was graduated from the University of California in 1927, and married Mr. Frederick S. Moody, Jr., of San Francisco, in 1929. She will be 27 on October 6, and doubtless has many more championships ahead of her.

Besides her unequalled skill as a tennis player, Mrs. Moody is an accomplished artist, a collection of her paintings and drawings having been exhibited in the Grand Central Galleries in New York in 1930.

America is proud of this amazing girl, whose brilliant record, both in this country and in Europe, marks her as the greatest woman tennis player of all time.

Since his retirement as head of Standard Oil in 1911, he has become the world's greatest philanthropist and has given nearly a billion dollars to various benevolent enterprises. Perhaps his most notable contribution to the welfare of mankind has been in the field of medical research.

COUPLE ENTERTAINED IN DOUBLE CELEBRATION

Last Saturday evening, July 22, Mr. and Mrs. John P. Moresco, of San Francisco and formerly of Colma, acted as host and hostess to over seventy relatives and friends from this end, the occasion being the housewarming of their new home in St. Francis Wood, as well as the eleventh anniversary of their wedding.

The evening was pleasantly spent with miscellaneous forms of entertainment in a beautifully decorated social hall, the decorations being palms, gladiolas and pink, yellow and green streamers, which were artistically set in place with numerous greens and flowers attached to the ceiling and side walls.

A jazz orchestra furnished the music for dancing, while Mr. Charles Randall, a famous San Francisco pianist, accompanied the singing and kept the crowd in a singing and dance mood till the early hours of the following morning.

Mr. Reno Luchetti acted as master of ceremonies and his humor was appreciated by all, as well as tthe speech by Supervisor Al Witt. One of the features of the evening was a prize waltz, which was won by Mr. Angelo Moresco, of Colma, and Miss Inez Merlo, of San Francisco. Mrs. Tom Bocci, of Colma, and Mr. Anthony Kambish, of Oakland, rendered several vocal selections, which were greatly applauded by the large crowd present.

Mr. and Mrs. Moresco deserve much credit for their able manner in putting over such a party, that will linger long in the memories of those present, who enjoyed the evening to the fullest extent of the genial hospitality of the host and hostess.

Many beautiful gifts were presented to Mr. and Mrs. Moresco for their new home from their relatives and friends on this occasion, and were greatly appreciated, as a beautiful little speech of thanks was returned by Mr. Moresco and enjoyed by all the listeners.

A sumptuous repast was indulged in by all at midnight in the social hall, fixed for the banquet, and the delicious refreshments will long be remembered by those who know what a repast it was. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Al Witt, Mr. and Mrs. Reno Luchetti, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Merlo, Mr. and Mrs. Angelo Moresco, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bocci, Mr. and Mrs. Gaston Ferrigno, Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Hookey, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Morton, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Bocci, Mr. and Mrs. Eno Antracolli, Mr. and Mrs. Amerigo Belluomini, Mr. and Mrs. Steve Lombardi, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Caesar Cervesi, Mr. and Mrs. Bob De Grazia, Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Kambish, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Randall, Mr. and Mrs. Angelo Olcese, Mr. and Mrs. John Schenone, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Langford, Frances and Jack Belcher, Emil and Fred Klopfer, Captain Haskell Billings, Guerino Ricci, Pat Phelan, Jack McDougall, Josh Billings, Colin Bennett, Patrick Walsh, Charles Maggio, Jack Linda, L. SOAP-BOX ORATORS

Free speech as guaranteed by the Constitution is a citizen's right, but of is not to be exercised when or where it infringes upon equal rights of other citizens. Such is the substance of a ruling by the Massachusetts Supreme Court in denying a Socialist soap-box orator's appeal from a fine imposed for obstructing a street in Lynn.

In his appeal the defendant claimed the right of the people to assemble in the streets and to make speeches therein. Chief Justice Rugg in his opinion said:

"By the location of a highway, an easement of passage is secured for the public with all incidental privileges thereby implied. Whatever interferes with the exercise of this easement is a nuisance. It is manifest that making a speech from a box and thereby gathering a standing crowd of people is an obstruction to the right of the public to use the highway for travel."

But soap-box orators are not the only persons who obstruct the streets and highways to the annoyance and inconvenience of the public.

SYNOPSIS

With his yacht, the Intrepid, abandoned by its crew, Felix Horton, millionaire, with his mother, his daughter Nan, and Roy Stuart, puts into Squaw Harbor, Alaska, to recruit. Failing to secure sailors, he engages a bunch of nondescripts stranded there. A gigantic Pole, Sandomar, is their leader. Captain Waymire, the Intrepid's skipper, is an old friend of Eric Ericssen, unemployed sailor, and he engages to sail as chief officer. Nan and Eric indulge in a moonlight flirtation, which brings them both to the threshold of love. The Intrepid is wrecked by one of Sandomar's crowd. Eric takes command of a small boat, with Horton and his party. Unable to help, they watch Sandomar kill Captain Waymire and leave the ship with his crowd. Waymire has thrown Eric a revolver. On landing, Eric learns there is no communication with the outside world. Fireheart, priestess of the island, descended from a white man in the remote past, knowing a little English, welcomes the castaways. Sandomar declares there shall be no law on the island, but Eric, having the only gun, cows him for the time, declaring he is the law. He lays out work for all, whites and Indians alike. Nan faces the situation bravely. Eric's love for her swells, and he tells her he means to win her for his mate, despite all obstacles. She is not unwilling.

"You've already antagonized 'em. Certainly you don't imagine that they've taken kindly to this little monarchy you've set up. They'll rise against you, against your friends, too, the first chance they get. If Sandomar uses his head—and you know he has a good one—he can lead them in a revolt that will sweep us all into the sea. The only sensible thing now is to go the whole hog, rule 'em with an iron hand, regard the island not as their property but ours, and make it so tough for them that they'll gladly break their taboo to help us find our way back to civilization."

Roy went on. "We'll let that go for now. But there's another matter we won't let go. I refer to what you told Sandomar the first night on the island."

Eric turned gravely. "That I wanted one of the girls?"

"Yes. I thought at first you must refer to Marie, or that possibly it was just part of your bluff. Since then I've noticed your attitude toward Nan, and I heard your voice, though I couldn't hear what you said, when you accosted her this morning. I've been forced to the conclusion that you meant Nan, and meant it seriously."

Eric's eyes turned gray. "I did mean Nan. And I did mean it seriously."

"Then I'm obliged to tell you—lay off! That's simple and plain, isn't it? I'll tolerate your seizing the reins here, but I won't stand to see you paying court to my prospective wife."

Eric's anger had been rising like the tide before a gale, but suddenly it ran out and left him struggling with a smile. "Isn't she the one to decide about this?"

"Unfortunately, not. As dictator here, you feel that you have the right to protect the Aleuts against an invader's ruthlessness. As Nan's friend, I have to protect her against her own folly. I concede that you are a gentleman; still in any normal state of affairs you wouldn't have a dog's chance with Nan. You could give her nothing, she would have to give you everything. You could never fit into her life, or she in yours. But out here, when every old standard is wiped away, she is likely to lose her head. You may make a primitive appeal to her, I can understand that very well, and sweep her off her feet: then there'd be another shipwreck when we get back to civilization. I mean to protect her against that—and protect you, too."

Eric's smile was now open and broad. "You needn't worry about me."

"Does that mean you'll confine your energies to running the island?"

"It means I can look out for myself. Moreover, I think Nan can, too." Eric's smile faded, and he faced Roy straight. "Anyway, my attentions to Nan are nobody's business but hers and mine, and if I can possibly get her, I'm going to do it."

Roy did not answer for a long time. At last his lips curled. "I see that your idealism is only for outside consumption; the welfare of your shipmates doesn't cut much ice when your own desires are involved. True, I respect you for that—it's fact, not fiction—but in secret you can remember that I'm your enemy."

Eric was ringed about with enemies. On all the island, he had only one staunch and unfailing ally—Mother Horton. Felix Horton leaned on him against his will. Wilcox looked to Roy as his chief, and would take his side in any break with Eric; Marie adored her mistress, blew hot and cold with her, and Nan herself was half-pal, half-foe. Sandomar and his men secretly plotted his death.

Where did the Aleuts stand? Without their friendship, Eric could not win. But they, too, resented his law. Eric could control the natives only so far as he could sway their priestess; and he could as well stake his life on tomorrow's weather! Fireheart was her rightful name—she was as one of the elements—and she obeyed her own law.

When he passed by the shrine on the fourth evening, she called him in throaty, throbbing tones. "White Chief!"

He paused, and she came to the doorway. In her slanted eyes was a gleam that stirred his pulse, calling to the brute that slept in some black cellar of his brain, but her dark skin repelled him.

"You no come see Fireheart heap much," she chided gently.

"I've been working hard, to get food for the people."

"But you no get Fireheart food she want. She mighty hungry, mighty thirsty." She smiled wistfully. "You no catch'm love yet?"

"Not yet, Fireheart. But I want you to be my friend."

"Your skin like snow. Maybe your heart like ice. Fireheart, she no want be your friend, she be your girl! Maybe you think Fireheart no so pretty as girl who come in boat. Maybe you think no white man want her. But fine, big white man come to her last night, say he take her, say he want her heap."

She did not fail to see that this shot went home. "Who was it?" Eric asked quickly.

"Man whose skin like milk, hair like dry grass. He say his name Swede." She smiled and nodded. "He promise take Fireheart to white man's country, treat her fine. Fireheart no give to him yet, but maybe she will if White Chief no catch love pretty quick."

Eric's flesh crawled at the prospect—the virgin priestess of the lost isle in the arms of the worst cut-throat in Sandomar's crew—but when he opened his lips to protest, the ringing words would not come. How little and futile was one man's power!

"You No Come See Fireheart Heap Much," She Chided Gently.

"I'd rather you married one of your own tribe," he told her at last.

"I no marry Aleut. I white girl."

He saw her dusky skin, her straight coarse hair, her slanted eyes. "Then if you want Swede, take him. He won't carry you away with him—if he does, he'll not stay with you—but if you're determined to have a white man, I suppose he's as good as any."

The eager light died in her eyes. "I no want him! I tell you big lie. Fireheart she feel cold, sick, when Swede touch her, put arm around her. I want you, man I see in dream." Her voice gathered power. "When you touch hand, Fireheart she no cold, she warm like when sun comes through cloud. She no sick, she feel like she fly in air like pouchkie. If you no catch love soon, Fireheart think maybe she die."

But Eric could only turn aside. "If Swede makes trouble for you, come and tell me. And remember what I said—that love comes when it comes, and no man can catch it. Now let you and me be friends."

The girl gazed dreamily away. "Maybe you never catch love for Fireheart," she murmured at last. "Maybe you want girl who come in boat. I hear you say so first night you come, but Fireheart make prayer she no hear right. But maybe she did hear right."

And now Eric must deal in half-lies. The safety of his whole party was at stake. "I think the girl you mean intends to marry Roy. I don't suppose I could get her, no matter how much I want her."

"Fireheart make prayer he get her quick, so you no think of her no more. Then maybe you want Fireheart." A low red flame shone through the black iris of her eyes. "But she tell you, she no common squaw, she priestess of lost people. She no wait till she old woman for you come take her. She love hard—like big tide in full moon—but she no-love like devil-wave sweep over rocks."

* * * * * * *

In the meantime, Sandomar's gang had kept the law. Although their looks were sullen, they worked steadily and well. But Eric knew that this was only the calm before the storm. His guard did not relax, but tightened with the passing days. Darkened by fears, plagued by evil dreams, his nerves constantly on edge, he longed for the blow to fall, so the war could end either in definite victory or hopeless defeat.

When the knife-cuts on his ridge-pole recorded seven days—when seven eternities had come and gone since his exile on Forlorn Island—Eric had gone to a lonely reach of beach to scout game. Sandomar's men were working quietly at the nets and traps. The Aleuts seemed cheerful, and the weather was worth recording in picture writing in the archives of the tribe.

For the first time since the shipwreck, he could take down his guard. His muscles need not be cocked like the hammer of a pistol, and his eyes could wander dreamily, with no care for flicking shadows just past their corners.

But suddenly the truce ended. It had been only an illusion—false dawn. Over the dunes and down the beach came two dark figures.

One was a little man, with a quick, short step. The other, barrel-chested and long of arm, had a hobbling, unsteady gait.

Like most men who dwell close to the sources of life, Eric had a strong intuitive power. A sense of grave peril hung over him. Somehow he knew that this open strand was to be the scene of one of the great crises of the island adventure.

Still the two nearing figures made no suspicious movements. Sandomar talked idly, Eric could see his head turn, and frequently Garge's little hand lifted to reply. To a casual view neither man was armed. The heavy ten-foot pole on Sandomar's shoulder was merely a piece of driftwood he had dug out of the sand and could well be carrying home for the supper fire. Garge had a stone the size and shape of a big potato in plain sight in his hand.

But Eric's alarm grew. In Sandomar's simian arm that young tree-trunk was a mere club. And there was something ominous about Garge's stone, carried openly though it was, that Eric could feel but at first could not quite interpret. Suddenly the truth dawned—the stone was in Garge's right hand. What deed did he anticipate, that he would be employing his untrained left hand to signal to his master?

Eric's own right hand fell to his side, in quick reach of his revolver, as his foes trudged near.

"I found this 'ere stone on the beach," Garge began when he was ten paces off. But he did not stop—still talking, he followed Sandomar until both men stood within six feet of their prey. "The old lady said she wanted a pestle for mashing up bread-root, and I thought this 'ere might do."

Eric hardly heard him. His thoughts were fairly flying, seeking deliverance. That these two foes had come deliberately to kill him he had not the least doubt.

To lose his head meant to lose his life. . . . But that danger was passed now. Suddenly his fears scuttled away like coyote cubs, and he was cold and deadly as a she-wolf. If this pair wanted a finish-fight, by G—d, they would get it! He would not wait for the trap to spring, but would strike first and hard.

He could spare the two cartridges. The only question was the best and safest way to carry out his iron resolve. In his present stand, he could not reach for his pistol. Both men would attack at once, and though he might down one of them, the other would be almost certain to get in a fatal blow.

"I saw a better stone for the purpose just a few seconds ago," he said thoughtfully. He backed a few feet, his eyes on the ground.

Apparently he had dropped his guard. Actually it was as strict as ever. He was not searching for stones, but watching the long shadows of his enemies, cast by the low sun.

The shorter shadow never wavered. Garge's eyes were quick as a rat's: perhaps he saw through Eric's trick. Anyway, it was not in his make-up to attack from the front, even though the hated stern eyes were lowered. He made the first move to warn his comrade.

But before the fingers of his untrained left hand could waggle their message, Sandomar's fury and hatred broke from its leash. He did not whirl to strike sideways with the pole. Eric was already out of reach of such a blow. Instead he jerked the short end of the pole straight down, with all the superhuman strength of his long biceps. As the long end flew up he meant to change hands, his left at the pole-end and his right far enough back to give him leverage, then strike down as with a club.

Sandomar's feet were unsteady, but his hands were known to be quick and clever. Garge knew that they would not fumble; that the giant's club would sweep up and down in a smooth and terrible arc, steadily gathering momentum until the air hummed, a blow to shatter the back of a walrus. If it struck fair—and Sandomar's blows usually did strike fair—the tough salt-laden trunk would break off on Eric's skull before it crushed through to his collar-bone.

Eric was only ten feet distant, in easy reach. Unless all signs failed the mighty bludgeon would be hanging heavy over his head before he looked up. Sandomar's brute heart was swelling, large and larger, with a horrible sadist ecstasy. It was fulfillment . . . victory . . . revenge. . . .

But as the island priestess had often told in the kashga on winter nights, chanting the ancient legends of the Aleuts, no man can escape his shadow. At Sandomar's first move, his black flattened image mocked him on the sand.

Eric saw its first flicker. His hand leaped up and out fast as a striking salmon. The blue steel of his revolver gleamed in the sunlight. On his face was a look of doom.

As the sweeping barrel came level with Sandomar's breast, Eric pulled the trigger. . . .

But the silence held. There was only a futile click of the hammer against the breach. The gun had misfired.

Blouse of Cotton-Crochet the Rage

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

WOULDN'T you just love to own one or several of those smart, cool, attractive and very practical mercerized-cotton hand-crochet blouses which high-class specialty shops are showing this season, to wear with the now-so-voguish linen (particularly black linen) or pique suits? Well, why not be the happy possessor of just such? They are so easy to make and inexpensive (when home crocheted) and are they good-looking!

As to hand-crochet, it's the rage just now. Chic Parisiennes simply dote on it, wearing blouses of crochet with their best-looking suits, and gloves, the cunningest affairs you ever saw, with flare cuffs, the whole thing done in a dainty lacy stitch. Belts, too, and pocketbooks and hats all of crochet, while their frocks are trimmed with designful crochet insets and entire yokes and edgings and such.

The group of clever blouses in the picture cannot but prove an inspiration to those who feel the urge to crochet. The vastly important thing about using mercerized cotton for these blouses is that it washes so perfectly no matter how colorful it be.

Of course you are going to have a hard time deciding which of the blouses pictured to copy. We think the model on the standing figure is particularly good-looking. It's "darling" when made in a pastel shade to match the skirt, although it is just as effective in contrast—pale blue cotton crochet blouse with a pink pique or flannel skirt, or, if you like monotones, a pink crochet blouse topping a pink linen skirt, a matching linen swagger coat completing this most intriguing threesome. Oh, there is no end to the staging of effects which can be done with these hand-crochet blouses. It is the handsome shell stitch which makes the aforementioned blouse outstanding, also the tricky picot (crochet) finishing at the neckline.

The eye-satisfying little sweater with its pert cap sleeves on the seated figure is crocheted in blue and white cotton, intermingled so as to give it a sort of tweedy effect.

The fashionable high neck of the striped-yoke blouse shown to the right below, also its wee puff sleeves, make this model a smart item in anyone's wardrobe. The buttons at the belt are a happy thought, avoids stretching when you slip the blouse over the head.

The young woman who's head and shoulders above the group are pictured, is very much in crochet attire. Her blouse is a perfectly stunning affair crocheted in the popular filet stitch, bright orange with white. The white sports hat crocheted of mercerized cotton has the soft, easily draped brim which is becoming to all types of faces. A band of mesh stitch suggests new height for the crown.

DOTS IN THE MODE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

It is surprising how persistently dotted effects keep in the mode. Today, polka dots, from medium to tremendous coin dots, are, if possible, more fashionable than ever. Paris designers especially exploit the dotted theme. To be sure, the costume pictured is rather extreme from an American standpoint, yet it goes to show how French couturiers are placing emphasis on dots. Another fashion which loses not in favor is that of black and white. As the season progresses it is apparent that black with white is as much in the limelight as ever. The tight-fitting sleeveless black velvet jacket and the self-fabric gloves are the high spots of this costume

Jacket Ensembles

The jacket frock is developed in all the fabrics of the moment—summer sheer crepes, printed crepes, chiffons, linens, pique, eyelet embroidery and other cottons.

ONE BLACK DRESS IS FOUND ENOUGH

Blessed are ye who have one good black silk dress and half a dozen sets of collars and cuffs, six hatbands, two hats, three pairs of shoes and two pairs of gloves with detached cuffs. With a rounded or V-neck for the dress, any number of diversified collars—size, shape and color—may be applied, being careful to choose the correct hatband, gloves, cuffs, shoes and purse.

With the hats, shoes and gloves black and white, or perhaps one set in a brown, beige or a medium green, you can do wonders with constructing a wardrobe suitable for all occasions. One evening gown, with two or three different jackets, accomplishes miracles and makes one realize that originality and ingenuity are having a big inning.

New Fall Coats Are Rich in Elaborate Fur Trim

The new coats shown in early fall displays are richly trimmed with fur, many of them having both collars and upper sleeve accents of silver, stone or blue fox, astrakhan or Persian lamb. Their silhouettes are generally almost straight, while their hemlines are from 7 to 11 inches from the ground.

The frocks shown with them are designed of soft wools or pebbled crepes with simple bodices, natural waistlines and slender skirts. Black, red, brown and deep green are the favorite hues for early fall.

Summer Corsets of Soft Rubber Bid for Favor

It isn't fair to keep talking about the top layer of fashion and extolling its virtues while taking the more obscure items for granted. And right now there is considerable news next to the skin.

A summer corset has made a bid for fashion's favor. It is made of soft rubber—no stays or things to cramp your style—and instead of being cut so long all the way down to give that sleek line over the hips and upper part of the thighs, sections are clipped out neatly back and front and the legs slip through rings like garters, making a perfect fit.

ROADSIDE MARKETING

By T. J. Delohery

GOLD UNDER YOUR GATE

THERE is an old story about a man wandering the world over in search of the pot of gold at the end of a rainbow, who, upon returning home tired, weary and discouraged, found the gold under his doorstep.

This fable applies in fact to thousands of farmers, farm women and children who have taken far shots at unseen markets away over the hills, and upon failing to get profitable prices, discovered even better markets at their door or within easy distance.

Good roads, the automobile, parcel post, express, city markets and the desire of the consumer for fresh, quality food have not only shortened the route to market for thousands of tons of products of the farm, home and garden, but have brought millions of extra dollars to thousands of farms.

Approximately a million farm people sell $200,000,000 worth of produce of the farm, home, garden, forests and wild rural districts direct to the consumer. In some cases this market provides the entire farm income. In others it greatly supplements the money brought in by the major farming activity, even though in no way related.

There seems to be no end to what consumers will buy from farmers. And by the same token there are very few farms on which something to sell cannot be raised.

Roadside marketing is the largest of the direct selling outlets. Stands located on main traveled highways do not have to hunt up customers. Hundreds and thousands pass daily; but it is up to the farmer to make them stop. It is being done by thousands of farm folks in all parts of the country.

In Michigan, on a 16-mile section of highway, more than half the 39 farms on the road sold direct to the consumer. These producers, according to a comparison of returns when produce is sold direct and marketed through regular channels, got 60 cents of the consumer's dollar. The farmers who sold on the terminal outlets received but 19.4 cents. The difference, despite a higher labor charge for roadside markets, came in the elimination of transportation and other charges for getting food from the farm to consumer.

Figures show the cost of distributing food at the end of 1932 was 47 per cent higher than before the war while the farm price of food was 42 per cent lower than the same period.

Surveys of roadside marketing have been made in many states for the information of farm folks who want to market all or part of their produce in this way. In Ohio, for instance, 1,700 odd markets were located on 2,800 miles of state road. The average business of each stand was slightly over $1,700, ranging from several hundred dollars to many thousand, depending upon products handled and length of the selling season.

In addition to roadside markets, another profitable local outlet is the town retailers. The consumer demand for home-grown products is good, so surveys have indicated. And this is not patriotism entirely. City people realize that the nearer the source of supply, the fresher the food.

Mrs. R. L. Simerson, living several miles outside of the village of Linwood, North Carolina, supplies retail stores in six cities with fruit, vegetables, chickens, eggs, milk and buttermilk to the tune of $2,500 a year. All of this food is produced in her garden and home without any extra help.

When a Waterloo (Iowa) grocer asked W. S. Brown to bring in more of the kind of eggs he had been delivering, he said they had made a decided hit with his customers and that he could use many more than Brown was supplying. So Brown called together 30 of his neighbors who were working with the extension specialist in poultry, and they formed an association.

Each farmer graded and packed his own eggs in cartons which bore the association name. On the bottom of each box a number was stamped as a means of identification in event of complaints. None were made because of the good handling and frequent deliveries of the eggs which brought a premium of 5 cents a dozen to the farmers.

J. P. Nelson of Stillwater, Minn., is a dairyman who likes to play golf. Dairying is a job which allows little or no time for play; but Nelson, thanks to a change in marketing, not only plays golf when he wants to but increased his milk income by 25 per cent. Whipping cream, sold to local retailers, is the answer.

Elmer L. Rhodes of Abilene, Kan., finds selling to retailers permits a better distribution of labor in the production of crops he sells over his roadside market and in growing other things for sale later in the year. Early crops, too small for roadside marketing and ready before customers start coming to the roadside market, find good prices in town. Stores pay him twice as much for early asparagus as he can command when the roadside stand is open and production is general. Sweet corn and tomatoes, too, are sold to stores in large amounts so as to give Rhodes time to cultivate other crops which need intensive attention at that time. Later, when the roadside season is open, the same retailers buy potatoes and horseradish put up in half-pint bottles.

RENOVIZE CAMPAIGN LAUNCHED IN COUNTY

EDITOR'S NOTE: In an trticle in this newspaper last week, the meaning and purposes of "Renovizing" was explained, and a synopsis given of the experience of other cities. In this, the second of the series of articles by former Governor C. C. Young on "Renovize," the campaign plan for San Mateo county will be outlined.

By C. C. YOUNG

A renovize drive is based on the theory that mass action, when intelligently organized and directed, presents the surest means of obtaining maximum results in the shortest period of time.

In the "Renovize San Mateo County Campaign" this principle of concerted action is being used—as it has been used in recent months in other cities—to help cure a considerable part of the ills of the country at the present time.

It was mass action driven by fear which in the past reduced markets and stopped the flow of money in regular channels of trade. The aim of the renovize campaign organization is to dispel that fear and direct mass action in such a way as to enlarge these markets once more, and release one million dollars for immediate activity in all lines of business.

The campaign organization must be strong enough to accomplish this purpose. For this reason much thought has been given by your civic leaders to the form of organization to be used in San Mateo county.

The administration body is an executive committee, which is coordinating the efforts of the sixteen cities, towns, and seperate communities in the county. This central unit is supplimented by advisory, publicity, speakers, and other committees.

Each of the sixteen communities of San Mateo county will early in August conduct its own house-to-house canvass under its own leaders. The local drive is headed by a general local chairman.

The communities are subdivided into districts, and responsible for each district is a colonel. Under the direction of the general chairman, he will lead volunteer workers with individual block assignments in an efort to contact personally every property owner in his territory, and secure signed pledges to renovize.

This plan was worked out after a consideration of the various methods used by other cities. It follows most closely the system used several months ago in Philadelphia, where twenty-one million dollars was pledged in a campaign in which the goal had originally been set at fifteen million. It is grounded on sound economics and follows proven business methods.

That the goal of one million dollars in pledges can be secured in San Mateo County is not doubted by campaign leaders. This total is based on the average results of the twenty most successful campaigns of eighty-four which have been conducted throughout the United States. Though considerably higher than the pledges secured in a number of the cities, this county's goal of one million dollars should be easily passed if proper organization of enthusiastic workers will do it.

San Francisco is at this moment formulating plans for a ten million dollar renovize campaign, and its eyes are on San Mateo county. Pride, coupled with the enthusiam which has already become so evident, will put this county over the top.

Hundreds of spirited citizens have already volunteered their services to this gigantic co-operative enterprise. But a total of approximately five hundred workers are needed to make a thorough canvas of the county.

The economic benefits which will be derived by every individual in this county should be argument enough to persuade all who are able to lend a hand.

A $100 SHUT-OUT

A little baseball story that is both good and true concerns Jerome "Dizzy" Dean, the able but somewhat erratic pitcher of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Dizzy had been fined $100 for failing to show up for an exhibition game at Elmira, N. Y., and protested loudly, asserting that his absence was unintentional and the result of his mistake in boarding the wrong train, which took him to Pittsburgh instead of Elmira.

A few days later Dizzy was scheduled to pitch against the Brooklyn Dodgers, when Manager Gabby Street told him that if he would shut out Brooklyn the fine would be remitted. He was further told that merely winning his game would do him no good; it had to be a coat of whitewash.

And if you don't believe that Dizzy did his stuff, look up the record of the game, played in St. Louis on July 8. The score was St. Louis, 1; Brooklyn, 0.

Business is on the up-grade, says a current magazine. Which means that there is a hard pull ahead.

Uncle Sam has a bear sanctuary in Alaska, but we doubt that any of the Wall Street species are up there.

FROM ALL CORNERS

On a charge that he bit his wife's hand when she refused to allow him to use her automobile, Oliver J. Fritsch of St. Louis was fined $75.

Although he owned a meat market, he got nothing but pork chops for a year, Peter Kupiac of Chicago alleged in a bill for divorce against his wife.

Patrolman Guy Linton of Cleveland was served with a warrant charging speeding at 65 miles an hour, reckless driving and smashing a light pole while racing to catch a speeding motorist.

When he obtained a divorce on cruelty charges, Thomas Turner, of Pomeroy, O., received a 150-acre farm as alimony from his wife.

The lifetime wish of Mrs. Annie S. Prince, 70-year-old widow of Los Angeles, that her pet parrot be buried with her was carried out in her funeral services recently.

The Rev. Brewster Ross Hunt of Benton, Ark., known as the "marrying parson," has married more couples at that place in the past 26 years than any other minister.

Having trouble getting his truck started, William Hubisch of Chicago got out and looked under the hood, where he found a groundhog fast asleep.

G. A. Young of Tacoma, Wash., whose watch was stolen 17 years ago, recently found it in a pawn shop.

James C. Easter of Duluth testified that his wife took one look at him and left home for good after her brother had given him a beating.

Asked in court whether she was married, Miss Ada Calvert of New York, answered: "No, but I am only 48 and still have hopes."

Herman Glicker of Evanston, Ill., had a leg torn off when an automobile struck him, but it happened to be his wooden leg.

When sued for $14.01 Mrs. Clara McKay of St. Paul admitted that she owed $14, but hired a lawyer to fight the claim for the extra cent.

Stephen Flood of Belfast was sent to prison for beating his mother-in-law with his wooden leg.

Miss Barbara Allen of Glencoe, Ill., had as honor guest at her wedding a fox terrier that had saved her life by waking her when her home was on fire.

During the wedding of Miss Ellen Porter and Charles Gates in Chicago, an undertaker wheeled a casket into the church for a funeral an hour ahead of time.

George McQueen of Smith Center, Kan., escaped an operation when a jolt of his flivver dislodged a fishbone in his throat while on the way to a surgeon.

Mrs. D. P. Davis of Tampa, Fla., who divorced her husband for intemperance, remarried him 25 days later.

Pleading guilty to charges of disorderly conduct, sixteen youthful crap shooters promised Magistrate Bernard Lozicke in Brooklyn that they would go to church the following Sunday and give the dice a rest.

Mrs. Marguerite Bennett, a stenographer of Kansas City, Kan., has filed suit for damages against a grocer, alleging she suffered injuries when she slipped and fell on stray spinach leaves in front of his store.

If this item seems a trifle questionable for publication in a family newspaper, we can only say it is taken from the highly reputable American Magazine: "When a diplomat says yes he means perhaps; when he says perhaps he means no; if he says no he is no diplomat. But when a lady says no she means perhaps; when she says perhaps she means yes; if she says yes she is no lady."

SIDELIGHTS

An old war story recently revived: There was much rivalry between two regiments, one from Wisconsin and the other from Massachusetts, stationed at the same camp. One day a traveling evangelist approached the Wisconsin colonel asking permission to hold services and telling him that he had converted eight mon of the rival outfit. The colonel roared: "Adjutant, detail ten men for baptism at once; no damned Massachusetts regiment is going to beat us for religion."

Four government witnesses against Waxey Gordon, New York racketeer, have been murdered, according to the Federal attorney. Thus is a new field opened to unemployed gunmen. Gordon is charged with that most serious of gangster crimes, falsifying his income tax returns.

An interesting news item tells of the Harvard rowing crew of 1883, all nine still living, who boarded a racing shell and rowed two miles up Charles river as an incident of the recent commencement. These sturdy oarsmen, all now over 70, and all prominent in business and professional circles, recalled their victory over Yale half a century ago. They made the somewhat reckless promise to row up the Charles again in 1943.

Last year automobile thefts in Chicago and Cook county totaled 34,246, or more than the number of new cars registered during the same period. Consequently automobile insurance rates are higher in Chicago than elsewhere, the premium being $91.80 per $1,000 of insurance on a certain popular car, while other cities' rates are $30.50 in New York, $17.00 in Boston, $9.50 in Washington, and $7.50 in San Francisco.

Sea sickness, car sickness and air sickness may be relieved by electrically heating the back of the neck, according to Dr. E. E. Free, the eminent scientist, who declares the same treatment to be helpful in many cases of sick headache. It might even relive slightly that pain in the neck which the average radio program gives persons above the moron class.

Frank Thomson, of Muskogee, Okla., thinks he got a raw deal as referee of a wrestling match recently, and is asking $10,400 damages. He says every move of the bout was framed up, but that the promoters failed to inform him that he was to be thrown out of the ring by one of the wrestlers. Frank suffered a broken leg when he hit the concrete.

We read that a great many Democratic congressmen are still hanging around Washington, although it is well known that our national capital is not exactly an ideal summer resort. The explanation is offered that the boys are naturally afraid to go home because they have not been able to land any jobs for deserving Democrats in their districts.

Tuskegee Institute reports six lynchings in the United States during the first six months of 1933, or one more than the number reported for the corresponding period last year. Of those lynched two were white and four were negroes, from the following states: Louisiana and Tennessee two each, Georgia and Texas one each. While this was six lynchings too many, the record shows great improvement since the year 1892, when no less than 255 persons were lynched in the United States, 100 of them being white.

Perhaps one of the most versatile young women in the world is Miss Ilya Zorn, described thus by a writer in Grit. "She speaks seven languages fluently; she is a licensed aviatrix in the United States, a dramatic stage star in South America, a hunter of wild animals in Africa, a social favorite in London, and a successful fiction writer in Portugal." She is said never to have lived more than six months successively in any one country.

Bernard Swindler, of San Antonio, has been visiting his friend, Tommy Crook, in Oklahoma City. In spite of their names, they are highly esteemed citizens of their respective cities.

In a rolling pin throwing contest at Quincy, Mass., Mrs. Charles E. Stuart won over a field of 50 contestants, striking the head of a dummy at a distance of 25 feet with unerring precision. We imagine that Mr. Stuart has a wholesome respect for his wife's skill.

Arthur Brisbane declares that "any one of 10,000 gladiators that fought to amuse ancient Rome could have made short work of Sharkey and Carnera." While we don't believe that, we have no way of proving that Arthur is wrong.

It is only two years ago this month that Russel Boardman and John Polando flew from Brooklyn to Istambul (Constantinople), Turkey, making a record non-stop distance flight of 5,041 miles in 49 hours. Yet when Boardman died a few days ago from injuries recived in a crash at Indianapolis, his former record-breaking feat had been forgotten by all except those who pay especial attention to aviation.

WHISPERS

In New York state for some time it has been a crime to knowingly circulate a false report about the financal stability of a bank. Recently, Governor Lehman approved an amendment to this law extending its provisions to cover false reports about insurance companies and commercial organizations.

This has been done to check, as far as possible, the whispering epidemic which has been one of the most dangerous features of the present world depression. And the whisper spreads more rapidly than any fever or scourge. Men who gather statistics say that one maliciously uttered remark can spread from a single individual to every person in a city of 100,000 in less than two hours. That is how runs on banks have been precipitated. The whisper plays no favorites.

Often a whisper has nothing more malicious back of it than the habit of individuals to pass along hints or rumors that have been imparted to them. However, this innocence of motive does not mitigate the effects of the action. It must be stopped.

James A. Beha, general manager and counsel of the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters, recently characterized the whisper properly when he said:

"A whisper is like a snake and should be treated as such. We crush the head of a serpent, trample it under our heel. We should do the same thing to a whisper."

Boston culture was again demonstrated the other day by the theft of a truckload of beer near the historic Common.

We lend Russia money to make her a customer. Why doesn't our grocer try that plan on us?

SPLINTERS

From the H. H. Smith Lumber Yard

VOLUME 6 FRIDAY, JULY 28, 1933 NUMBER 1

Published in the interests of the People of Daly City and vicinity by H. H. Smith and Employees.

Mr. Braggo: "My father sprang from a line of peers."
Mr. Bored: "Did he drown?"

"See that man? He is the first surgeon ever to perform a successful operation on the jugular vein."
"Is that so? And what has it led to?"
"Oh, just a lot of vein glory."

If you are thinking of building, this is the place to get your building material.

The Shipwrecked Professor: "In my own country, you ignorant fools, I am regarded as a man of letters."
The Cannibal King: "Good! Fine! We'll make you into alphabet soup."

"I have known gentlemen that give a bit over," observed the taxi driver.
"Ay," said McPherson, "that's why I asked ye to stop under a lamp."

If in need of anything in the building line, this is the place.

Gunn, the big game hunter, was telling his stay at home wife all about his encounter with the Bengal tiger, and how he finally shot it. "Yes," he wound up, "it was a case of the tiger or myself."
She looked at him proudly. "I am so glad it was the tiger," she replied, "otherwise we wouldn't have this lovely rug."

When writing love letters to your girl, it is always an act of precaution to begin: "My dear sweetheart and gentlemen of the jury."

No Hope
"I've lost my automobile."
"Did you report it to the sheriff?"
"No use. It was the sheriff that took it."

If you don't decide today, we can be found here tomorrow.

"I wish now," said the lecturer, "to tax your memory."
A wail in the audience: "Has it come that?"

Mrs. Newlywed (to the butcher): "I want some lard."
Butcher: "Pail?"
Mrs. N. W.: "Oh, does it come in different shades?"
